A great event has come to pass. A resullooked for and longed for and prayed for during the last four years, but sometimes almost despaired of, has taken place. The keystone has been knocked from the rebel arch. fallen. The centre, the heart, the stronghold, the capital of the Southern Confederac is in Federal hands. The houses of the rebel esident and Vice-President, the Congress halls, the hotels, Libby Prison, Castle Thunder, Belle Isle, and the Tredegar Works are Union racks. The old flag streams over them like a hundred meteors. The streets are as blue as the sea or sky with Federal uniforms. The note of Yankee Doodle and the Star Spangled Banner resound there, thrilling every heart, roughout the day and night. Glad shouts of loyalty are heard where the howls of treason have loaded the breeze. Blessings are invoked apon the Union where curses have been raine on it like a poison-dew. "On to Richmond" need no longer be the cry of our armies. Let the nation thank God and rejoice. Let the under of artillery echo the glad news and hage boufires flash it over the country.

This is indeed a grand event. It is the gres event of the war. It is an event of tremendous moment. It cannot fall to be accepted by hun reds of thousands even of the bitterest and most determined of the rebels in the South as volving the end of the rebellion. We pre-Forme that Richmond was evacuated by the rebels, and it is stated that Petersburg has been sated too, Gen. Lee finding it impossible to hold either place. What his plans now are, if ant and Sheridan, it seems, are pressing him back everywhere, capturing guns by scores and prisoners by thousands and shattering his ength as if it were glass. If he await reinpreements from Johnston, he will probably be colished before Johnston can arrive, and, if he attempt to retreat to Johnston or to make his way into Lynchburg, it is not likely, that, with Sheridan's powerful cavalry pressing upon him like the genius of destruction and with all the railroads blocked against him, he can escare with even one-half of his troops.

We seem to ourselves to see a ware-win d Angel in the air, and her name is Peace. She theds a tear for the past, but her holy and beautiful countenance glows with joy for the future.

NEMPSIS -Richmond is fallen' and, as the petric news is borne through the land, a thrillcity, town, or plain, new life and new hope are nspired by an event so significant of national nor and gl ry. Only second in importance to the achievement of peace itself is the posseson's capital, it has been said, is a nation's heart, and with equal truth we may affirm that Ri hmond has been, for four years past, very centre of the rebellion. There the Confederates made their laws; there the rulers held their seats; there the highest trlements were reared; there the main grand urmy was gathered, and there, like Camillus ious Lee was stationed, to protect and hold the Capital. With deep, yea, painful anxiety, we have watched the brilliant combinations of Grant and Sherman and Sheridan, all concentrating upon the great result at last so gloriously We breathe more freely now as we think of the starry banner floating in triumph above e there to stand by the bronze statue of Jackson in the publi square and feel that the immortal prin 'les of the old hero were being
